“ To Our Mother

The Lotus blooms and flourishes amongst impurities. Despite its surroundings or past—instead, the plant uses them to its advantage and does not look back, growing every day. Each passing day into the next the Lotus represents rebirth from death. Minds are like flowers; they open only when the time is right. New beginnings set forth to occur during this pivotal period, ascension towards spiritual enlightenment.

My mother's at peace now and has met her purpose to fulfill in this waking life on earth. This I feel beyond words can describe or one can comprehend. Intuitively I knew her waking life was limited for some time, yet I decided to live in the moment, ignoring my gift for this chapter; realizing we all have our missions to accomplish. Keeping this remarkably close to my heart. Now I understand the purpose of my action leading to a beautiful outcome. With the spiritual interpretation I understood her body was only a representation of her vessel, which carried her energy to the other side. She was always remaining in spirit once the day came. Living in the moment allowed me to see her joy witnessing a second blessing of a beautiful grandchild be born. Enjoying the priceless moments of being a grandmother.

She often mentioned not enough time was spent the first experience with my son, and to see her being able to do it and with more time was inevitably joy that could never be replaced. Also, the joy of witnessing rebirth knowing death would soon come; the epitome of living in the moment. She did spend time with Elijah and many of his experiences are ingrained in him. My nephew, Asiah will remember her through her daughter's honor; carrying her legacy and surrounding him with memories how she adored the time. The traditional process of honoring an ancestor. She bestowed her beautiful presence upon many; showing many of us the true defining moment and the fortune of knowing what love really is. How her fierceness was only a force field of her true nature; her gentle, altruistic, and nurturing soul that still exists. Such innate sense has passed down to her beautiful daughters. In return the legacy was repeated to their children, her grand babies.

May the process repeat infinitely. That is what I will leave within the space missing of my gaping heart that is compounded with somber; eventually healing and ultimately realizing what once was where she was and still is....in my heart. May she live on.
