“ I was sitting in a doctor’s office at Washington Hospital Center when I heard someone say my name. There was a question mark in her voice. I looked up and replied yes, I am Sherri Greenwood. I asked if there was a problem. The lady made a funny face, and in that squint I saw someone familiar. We looked at each other (she had the advantage of a chart), I looked again and then I said: LeeAnn, is that you!?!? We had not seen each other in decades, yet there it was, that family connection. We were children together, a long time time ago and in a far away place. We hugged and sat and chatted for a while, an all too short while, and then we said our farewells. I never saw my cousin again, but I will never forget the warmth of her hug and the sweetness of her smile. May she ever rest in the peace she deserves.
