“ I met Kevonne in the McKibbin lofts through a mutual friend, (an ex-boyfriend of mine) and years after that romance fizzled, Kevonne and I reconnected and she became someone so special to me.

When I became disabled and chronically ill, I was in tailspin. I lost so much of my identity and honestly a lot of my own will to continue on. I felt so lost in the world, foreign and detached from humanity. Who could I be and how would I continue on in this harsh and often ableist world?

Connecting with Kevonne gave me so much strength and faith, to see someone who was just such a beacon of life, even in the face of the toughest health battles. Somehow, through everything she was going through, she ALWAYS managed to show up as one of the most positive and grateful people I have ever been blessed to meet.

At times, she felt almost a lifeline for me, someone who offered me tremendous understanding to what I was going through, when no one else in my life could. Her generosity shone so brightly, she was always someone who offered every bit of help and assistance and hope that she could, even up through what I came to learn were her final weeks.

I'll carry her friendship in my heart always and only dream that I can, in her spirit, offer someone else the kindness, acceptance, and inspiration that she gave to me. <3
