“ Dear Mommy,

I miss you so much wishing you were here with us. Trying my best to go on but its hard and your passing just doesn't seem real even though I know it is. So days or harder than others but I know in my heart you are watching over us. I look at your picture and wonder what you are doing in heaven. Sometimes I have to catch myself because I start to talk to you and then I realize its just a picture in a frame. As we approach the 2 year anniversary of your passing its getting harder to hold by the tears. Why did you have to go I pray one day God will let me know. Waiting and trying to live so that one day I will see you again. Love you so much. Keeping the family together.

Love, Vicky

“ The second year anniversary of my mom's passing is approaching and it seems just like yesterday, that I lost my beautiful angel, mommy I think of you everyday and my prayer is so that i can live according to God's plan so I can see you again. So often i feel alone and I have many feelings of despair. I know in my heart that you want me to go on with my life, but how can I be happy with out my best friend, the one I shared all my deepest secrets and fears with , the one who never judged me and loved me in spite of my many faults, failures and mistakes. I just ask for God to please give me strength to make it. I have so many memories of you with your calm, humble and genuine spirit, that came from God. I remember sitting at your beside watching you sleep and every so often you would wake up and smile and say, "my baby, you're still here, you need to go home with the girls" I can still hear your voice saying "Fran you're going to be alright" I hold on to those words everyday because you never lied to me so I'm waiting on that day when I'll be OK. I LOVE you mommy but you already know that! XOXOXOXO
