“Dearest Tyrone, I remember the day we met on the front steps of Webster and we both shoveled away the snow and we talked hours away. Little did we know that that would lead to years of friendship. While we were neighbors at Webster, I would leave a couple of Girl Scout cookies on your door knob, and you would leave a packet of Ramen noodles on my mat. Whenever I had an unwelcome guest that would run out from behind the stove I would knock on your door and you would say “I’m gonna show you one time and one time only” even if it was the fifth or sixth time I knocked. I remember helping you with the groceries up the stairs or helping with your break down the stairs. Then after the years of being neighbors, we ran into each other after returning from a night at the paradox, that’s when we discovered we shared the love of music and dance. I will really miss our long chats on the phone, our trips to Walmart and your chats with my mum about west African drumming and i will cherish the sound of you both laughing together on the same set of stairs where we shared our first laugh together that snowy day. Your friendship is so dear to me, and I am so thankful for you. I am blessed to have been your friend. We will find each other within the beat of a drum, in the rhythm of the dance floor and every time I think of our friendship. We will meet again somewhere high above the clouds because that is certain for those who are friends. Sent with love, Philly
